The United Way of Johnson County's 2010 campaign was a banner year for the group, announced officials from the organization. More than $2.3 million was raised by individuals and company-wide campaigns in the Iowa City area during the last year, campaign chairman Russ Schmeiser told a packed assembly room at the local United Way's Live United Community Celebration. Those gathered were there to close out the local United Way's 2010 campaign and honor the contributions, volunteers and agencies, said Christine Scheetz, president and CEO of United Way of Johnson County. Campaign contributors and United Way volunteers also were recognized during the program. Johnson County Supervisor Terrence Neuzil was honored as Volunteer of the Year. Patti Fields, Vice President of Community Impact and Engagement presented the award to Terrence and had the following to say, "Leadership is an outstanding quality and when you combine that with a commitment to improve our community, you will find a dedicated leader who is willing to serve and volunteer in many roles. This year, Terrence Neuzil has gone above and beyond to serve. He served on the 2010 Community Assessment Steering Committee, 2010 United Way Campaign Cabinet and as the 2020 Vision Education Commission Chair. We are all very grateful for his leadership and time given to our community."
